RESOURCES FOR CONDUCTING A PREEMPTION CHECK

The best way to conduct a thorough literature review is to search law review and journal articles as well as works in progress published as working papers such as those posted on SSRN.

While it is possible to conduct searches in full-text law review databases, such as HeinOnline or in Westlaw and Lexis, it is important to also consult a legal index, such as LegalTrac (or LRI in Westlaw or Lexis), the Index to Foreign Legal Periodicals and possibly the Air University Library's Index to Military Periodicals (AULIMP).

Getting Published:

Nancy Levit, Lawrence Duncan MacLachlan, & Allen K. Rostron, Submission of Law Student Articles for Publication (July 26, 2010), available at SSRN: <http://ssrn.com/abstract=1656395>. (Downloading from SSRN is free; you just need to register.) The authors include a long appendix listing all of the general law reviews in the U.S. with notes about their policies of accepting submissions from students. They also suggest other places to publish, such as specialty journals and bar journals.

Users can also subscribe to SmartCILP and receive a regular list of selected subject headings and journals. This service is available for free to UW Law School students and faculty. For more information, see: <http://lib.law.washington.edu/cilp/scilp.html>
